I had heard about wilderness survival camps from some classmates who went to one last summer. They were very excited about their experience and I was very curious. So during last month's term break I decided to go to one. After everything I $(1) \dots$ I was really looking forward to it. On the first day our instructor reassured us that the woodland $(2) \dots$ us with almost everything we needed. We $(3) \dots$ how to find water, how to light a fire and how to build shelter with only branches and leaves. The water was easy to find, but the food was not. To my horror, I discovered that we had to find our own. This meant hunting. We $(4) \dots$ out in groups and managed to find some berries and mushrooms. One of the boys in the group was able to light a fire and we proceeded to prepare a meal. However, as we $(5) \dots$ the mushrooms, they $(6) \dots$ fire. I was able to save most of them, but they tasted strangel I realised by the second day in the camp that it is not easy to live without the things we $(7) \dots$ accustomed to in our everyday lives.
