Imagine the situation: a busy mother is pushing a heavy trolley around a supermarket. Her baby is sitting in the seat and crying $(1) \dots$ food, while her two bigger children have become bored and are starting to run $(2) \dots$ the shop. They have already spent $(3) \dots$ hour in their car, stuck in queues of vehicles waiting to park, and the mother will soon have to carry a large number of bags back to the car. Wouldn't it be a whole lot easier $(4) \dots$ the mother to order her shopping $(5) \dots$ the Internet? This method of shopping saves time and transport costs, enables you to see $(6) \dots$ much greater range of goods, and must surely be a lot less stressful. So why has internet shopping not caught on to $(7) \dots$ greater extent? The answer may well be that most people still enjoy leaving their homes to shop. They want to be able to see and touch the goods, try $(8) \dots$ clothes before buying them, for example. That is why, in my opinion, internet shopping will never replace conventional shopping.
